Domestic Violence at Work New Online Resource

To: Presidents and Local Executives
From: Paul Elliott, President

For Information

As part of the continued commitment of the Canadian Labour Congress to keep people safe at work, the CLC has recently launched a new online resource. This website provides important information to union representatives about domestic violence as it impacts the workplace.

According to the CLC December 6th statement, "Our new resource centre will include tools and strategies for union leaders, representatives and members to help build awareness, break the silence, and improve workplace safety for everyone." The information can be found at www.domesticviolenceatwork.ca.

A new poster/brochure has been developed and will be distributed at January Provincial Council. Domestic violence is a union concern and this website will assist local leaders in building awareness, supporting members and holding employers accountable for their obligations under the Occupational Health & Safety Act.

OSSTF/FEESO encourages local leaders to visit the website and learn more about how to support members who are experiencing domestic violence.
